This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

[1]These lands appear in the Rental Book of the barony of Glasgow between the years 1527 and 1564, under the varying names of "Lynnyngis Hawch, Lunyngis Haucht, and Linnaige Hawcht" (Diocesan Registers, i. pp. 27-181). They extended to about twelve acres, and formed the south-western portion of Conclud, an ancient possession of the see of Glasgow. Subsequent to the Reformation the lands were in the possession of several rentallers, to whom feu charters were eventually given; and when, about the year 1661, the magistrates and council began to acquire the area now forming Glasgow Green, "Linningis-hauch" was purchased by them. Originally, the Molendinar Burn was the western boundary, but on account of the stream, in times of flood, breaking into new channels, portions of the lands were transferred from the left to the right bank, and thus these detached portions became the southern boundary of the properties on the south side of Bridgegate. Taking advantage of the changed course of the burn, some of the owners of Bridgegate properties appropriated the severed lands. Among the city's papers there is preserved a complaint, made in the year 1596, regarding one of these appropriations, in these terms:—"My lord prouest, baillies, etc. Unto your lordschippis humlie menis and complenis I, maister Henry Gibsoun, for myself and in name of the remanent fewaris of Lwningishaucht, upoun Jonet Blair, relict of umquhill Johne Muir in Briggate, John Riche, cowper, Patrick Snodgers, Cristina Fultoun, James Tailyeour alias Dunlop, elder, that quhair I have pertening to me the saxt pairt of Lwnyngishawcht, nixt and adjacent to the burn of Malyndoner, quhilk be inundatioun of spaittis hes tane fra my land ane greit quantite. Sasine given by Mr. John Hall, bailie. As Alisone

[1]The land of Crukisfie and bailliary thereof had been renounced by Sir Patrick Howstoune, of that Ilk, in favour of the earl of Lennox on 17th June. See protocol No. 1011.

[2]The earl of Lennox was at this time governor of the kingdom, and four days afterwards was appointed Regent in succession to the earl of Moray, who had been assassinated at Linlithgow on 30th January preceding. In the interval, Glasgow had shared in the disturbances caused by the feud between the two factions into which the country was divided. A party of Hamiltons, supporters of Queen Mary, had assailed Glasgow Castle in May, but retired on the arrival of English and Scottish soldiers commanded by Lennox; and it is probable that between May and July the town had been occupied and protected by a detachment of that body.

[1]The old Grammar School of Glasgow was situated a little west of the High Street, and on the south side of a wynd now merged in Ingram Street. This wynd was, at one time, called Ronald's Wynd—perhaps from its forming an entry to Ronald's or Rannald's Yard—but it subsequently took its name from the school. So early as the year 1460-1, Simon Dalgleish, precentor and official of Glasgow, gifted the site of the school to the then rector and his successors, and appointed the magistrates and council to be patrons and governors, functions which they performed till the Education Act of 1872, transferred the management to the School Board. The school buildings were renewed from time to time (see Glasgow Charters, pt. i. pp. xxxv., xliii., cxcii., cclxi.), but the original site was retained till the year 1788. About that time the town council erected a new school on part of their Ramshorn lands, fronting George Street, and having no further use for the old property, they sold it to the "General Session of Glasgow, administrators for the poor of the city," at the price of £300. In the conveyance, the property is described as "the old Grammar School in Glasgow, belonging to the magistrates and councill of the city of Glasgow, as representing the community of the said city; which school is situated on the west side of the High Street, leading from the market cross to the metropolitan church in Glasgow, lying on the south side of the wynd called the Grammar School Wynd; as also the slated house of office and vacant ground, and other pertinents belonging to the said school, as the premises are possessed and used by the masters of and schollars in the said school, and as the marches thereof and walls and dyke belonging thereto are ascertained by a decree of the dean of guild court of Glasgow, dated 17 April, 1788" (MS. Sasine Register, 7 July, 1788). The General Session disposed of the property in 1829, and it remained with private proprietors till 1870, when it was acquired by the Improvements Trustees (Purchase No. 504). Part of the site is now possessed by the feuar of a steading at the south-west corner of Ingram Street and High Street, and the remainder is included in the site of the Fire Engine Station now in course of erection.

[1]This property appears to have been the tenement and yard lying "fra the Wyndheyd to the Blak Freris, on the west syd of the gaet, betuix the landis of Patrik Myllar on the northt and Sant Mungois chaplane on the sowtht," sold by James Flemyng to Robert Malynne and Katryne Dowglas, his spouse, on 16 January, 1536-7 (Protocol No. 1282). After various transmissions, it came into the possession of Robert Wyning, who, in the year 1635, sold it to the city of Glasgow at the price of 1000 merks, for the purpose of being used as a meal market. In the disposition by Wyning to the city, dated 25 November, 1635, the property is described as "ane tenement of land, back and foir, with yaird, ane rwynous barne at the end thairof, and haill pertinentis of the samyn, lyand within the said brught, upoun the wast syd of the hie street thairof, passand fra the metropolitane kirk to the mercat cros, boundit betuixt the landis sumtyme perteaning to James Hammiltoun of Bardowie, and now to James Stewart on the northe, the landis of umquhile James Elphinstoune on the southe, the commoun passage that passes to the Greyfriaris on the wast, and the hie street on the eist part" (MS. Inventory of City Writs, i. p. 22). The former meal market of the city was situated in the Blackfriars kirk yard, on the opposite side of the High Street, but the space it occupied was probably required in connection with the alterations made on the Blakfriars Kirk and yard when these were transferred by the college to the city in 1635 (Glas. Rec. i. p. 159; Charters, pt. ii. pp. 350, 357). The new meal market had been erected, and the "tounes armes" hewn on the building, before the end of the following year (Glasg. Rec. i. pp. 379, 482). In 1766 the market premises were extended by the purchase of adjoining properties, situated between High Street and Shuttle Street, as the "commoun passage" was then called.

In the year 1788 the town council had under consideration a scheme for giving employment to idle and disorderly persons, and, as a beginning, transformed some of the market granaries into a place for the reception of such persons, designating the new institution the "Glasgow Bridewell" (MS. Council Rec. xxxiii. pp. 242, 348). This experiment proving successful, more commodious premises were subsequently secured, and fitted up in Duke Street, and the new Bridewell was opened at Whitsunday, 1798 (Ib. xxxviii. p. 146). Meanwhile, the mealmarket and Bridewell premises on the west side of High Street had been disposed of to the college in 1792 (in excambion for property on the north side of Gallowgate), and were held on lease until the inmates could be removed to the new Bridewell. After being acquired by the college authorities, the site of the mealmarket and first Glasgow Bridewell was laid out with adjoining ground in building lots, and is now partly occupied by the buildings immediately to the north of the present College Street.

As shown by Nos. 1282 and 1676, the tenement to the south of Malynne's property belonged at one time to the chaplainry of St. Kentigern; probably part of the endowments bestowed by Andrew Steward, archdeacon of Galloway, in 1506 (Reg. Episc. Glasg. No. 485).

[1]The site of the subdean's manse has been acquired by the Glasgow Improvements Trustees (purchases Nos. 363, 968, and 1095), and the western portion of it now forms part of Cathedral Square. From the title deeds, it is ascertained that the manse belonged to Sir James Stirling, of Glorat, in 1746, and that it was sold by Sir Alexander Stirling to Robert Mathie, deacon of the wrights, in 1773. In the Improvements Trust plans (area F1 Nos. 15 to 49) the property is shown as lying between Molendinar Burn and Drygate Lane, at a short distance southward from the old Barony Church. The description in the title runs thus:—"All and haill that tenement of land, called the manse of the subdeanery of Glasgow, with the close and yard at the back thereof, lying within the territory of the burgh of Glasgow, upon the north side of the King's high street, leading from the Drygate street to the high church and castle of Glasgow, and lying of old between the manse of the rector of Glasgow, which thereafter belonged to Thomas Crawford of Jordanhill, and the manse of the dean of Glasgow on the north parts, and the manse of the said rector [probably of Tarbolton or Cardross] on the south, the burn of Molendinar on the east and the King's highway on the west parts." Part of the site of Cardross manse was acquired by the Improvement Trustees under purchase No. 1094.

Crawford of Jordanhill acquired the manse of the rector of Glasgow by a charter from Archibald Douglas, with consent of the archbishop, dean, and chapter, dated 20 October, 1571 (confirmed by the crown, 21 May, 1572: Reg. Mag. Sig. iv. No. 2068). In that charter the manse is described as ruinous and unable to be repaired, except at great expense. An entry in the Glasgow Records, dated 30 May, 1574 (i. p. 12) specifies certain arrangements between Crawford and Conyghame with respect to the buildings on their respective properties, indicating that the old manses were then being rebuilt or repaired.

[1]Craigmacht, otherwise called Craigmak or Craegmak, is mentioned in protocols Nos. 183, 326, 650, 1061, 1906. In the council records the place is frequently referred to in connection with the proclamation of Glasgow fair. Thus, on 6th July, 1574, "the court of the burght and citie of Glasgw" was "haldin at Craigmak, upone the fayr evin," when "the baillies, counsale and communite present ordanis everilk buytht halder to have in reddines within the buytht ane halbert, jak, and steilbonet, for eschewing of sik inconvenientis that may happin, conforme to the auld statute maid thairanent" (Glasg. Rec. i. p. 18). Again, on 6th July, 1607, at "the heid court of Craignache, haldin upone the craig thairof," proclamation of the fair was made "in our soverane lordis name, and in name and behalf of ane noble and michtie prince Ludovic, dwik of Lennox, erll Darnlie, etc., baillie principall of the regalitie of Glasgow, and his deputis, and of the balleis of the said bruch." (Ib. p. 267). When M'Ure wrote his History of Glasgow (published in 1736) the practice of proclaiming the fair at Craigmak, then as now called Craignaught, was still observed; and he makes this curious remark on the subject: "It was at the special instance of a prior of the convent of the Grayfriars that the fair . . . was procured, and the community of this city was so sensible of this favour, and the advantage of that fair, or concourse of the neighbourhood of all ranks coming to the city, that every last day of the fair annually they went and paid their complements to the prior of the Grayfriars at the convent; and to this day the fair is fenced within the inclosure or garden where the convent stood, at a place they call (but upon what account I cannot tell) Craignaught" (1830 edition, p. 57). As is well known, Glasgow fair was instituted under a charter by King William the Lion (1189-98, Glasg. Charters, pt. ii. p. 6) before the order of Greyfriars came into existence, so that the annual meeting at Craigmak cannot have originated in the way stated by M'Ure. Nor does it seem to be correct to say that the Greyfriars enclosure included Craigmak, though it is supposed that the two places adjoined each other (see No. 1061). Craigmak lay on the north side of Grammar School Wynd (now Ingram Street), and between the present Shuttle Street on the east and Ramshorn ground on the west. The Associate Congregation of Glasgow, formed in 1740, at first conducted worship in a tent at Crosshill; but shortly afterwards they acquired a portion of Craignaught yard, and there erected a church fronting Shuttle Street. Adjoining grounds were subsequently acquired by the congregation, and the building in North Albion Street, now occupied by their lineal successors, Greyfriars U.P. congregation, is situated either on Craignaught or adjoining ground. The site of the first church and other portions of Craignaught, now traversed by College Street, were conveyed by the church trustees to Glasgow College in 1845 (Sasine Reg., vol. 283 fol. 221). Another place of worship called the Canon Street Chapel, belonging to the Free Presbyterian Society of Glasgow, stood on the southern portion of Craignaught, between 1766 and 1850. Part of the site is now occupied by the buildings on the north side of Ingram Street and west side of Albion Street (Cleland's Annals, 1829, pp. 133-4; Glasgow Past and Present, 1851, vol. i. pp. 165-6; Sasine Reg., vol. 347 fol. 236). Under the act of Parliament, 5 Geo. iv. c. 107, the lower part of Albion Street was widened, and a portion of the "yard called Craignaucht" was acquired by the town council from the Free Presbyterian Society and used for the purpose (Sasine Register, 26 December, 1828; vol. 139, f. 127).

The derivation of the first part of the name is obvious—a ridge of whinstone at the place sufficiently accounting for craig. Mach is gaelic for a plain, and seeing that the site embraces the almost level ground at the foot of Deanside brae, the compound word, perhaps, simply means the craig at the plain. When Ramshorn lands, situated to the westward of Craignaught, were being laid out in building lots, the rock there, being probably a continuation of the craig, caused some trouble. Thus, on 14th August, 1782, the town council, "considering that an idea has prevailed that houses to be built on Ramshorn ground will be damp on account that the course of the water and springs in these grounds is stopped by a small ridge of whin dyke which runs through the south parts of the ground, and that the removing of this idea will promote the sale of steadings for building on," authorised a cut to be made "through the whin dyke . . . so as the water may be cleared from Ramshorn ground" (MS. Council Rec., vol. 32 p. 88). Subsequently the council sanctioned the expenditure of £100 sterling in driving "a mine through the whin rock, so deep below the surface as to bring the wells on the north side of the rock on a level on the south side thereof, which it was believed would effectually drain the ground on the north side" (Ib. p. 107).

1816. TENANTS OF DEYNFEILD (Tenandi Deynfeild). 4 January, 1571-2, 9 a.m.

Thomas Balfoure resigned in the hands of Mr. James Balfoure, dean of the metropolitan church of Glasgow, his brother, as superior, the lands of Deynfeld,[1] lying in the parish of Govane, granted to him (Thomas Balfoure) in feu-farm, and that in favour of and for new infeftment to be given to Michael Huchesoun, John Rowand, John Robesoun, and John Schelis, viz., to each the portion occupied by him. Done in the manse of the said lord dean[2] in the city of Glasgow. Witnesses: Sir Mark Jamesone, vicar of Kilspindy, Mr. James Lammy, David Balfoure, and Robert Blair, notary.

[1]The lands of Deynfeild were conveyed by James Balfoure, dean of Glasgow, to his brother, Thomas Balfoure, in feu-farm, conform to charter by the dean, with consent of the canons and chapter of Glasgow, dated 8 December, 1565, confirmed by the crown on 16 November, 1570. The feu-duty stipulated in the charter consisted of 6 merks in money, 8 bolls of horse corn, and 24 capons, as old farm, with 16s. of augmentation (Reg. Mag. Sig. iv., No. 1940). Thomas Balfoure had now disposed of the property in lots, and the purchasers required to obtain investiture from the superior. See Protocols, Nos. 1843-4.

[2] Part of the sites of the dean's manse, and of another manse situated to the west of it, now traversed by John Knox Street and to some extent included in Cathedral Square, was acquired by the Improvements Trustees from the Merchants House in 1870 (purchase, 459; area F 1, Nos. 5A, 6, 7, 8, 9). In the titles the manse property is described as "that large yard which was formerly a great tenement, with close, yard, well, dovecothill or soap-house, with the pertinents, called the Dean of Glasgow's Manse, bounded betwixt the manse called . . . sometime belonging to the earl of Kilmarnock on the west, the manse of the Subdean of Glasgow, sometime belonging to the laird [Hugh Corbett] of Hardgray, thereafter to Sir James Stirling of Glorat on the south, the burn of Molendinar on the east, and the High Church yard on the north parts." The manse left blank in the description was that of the Rector of Glasgow, part of the site of which was likewise acquired by the conveyance just quoted. It is there described as "that mansion house of the Rector of the Parish Kirk of Glasgow, with the yard, well, and pertinents of the same, acquired from William earl of Kilmarnock." See footnote to No. 1734.

When the old barony church and the old cathedral session house were recently exchanged for the new church in Kirk Street and the new session house in M'Leod Street, the corporation of Glasgow acquired the ground occupied by the former buildings for the purpose of being preserved as an open space. The barony church property was described in the titles as part of the Rector of Glasgow's manse, and was stated to be bounded by "the lands and mansion house sometime belonging to the Treasurer of Glasgow on the east." The session house was described as part of that yard over against the metropolitan church . . . as also that mansion house of the rector of the parish kirk of Glasgow" (Inventory of City's Writs, iv. b. 56). The "mansion house" of the treasurer is supposed to have been the manse of the canon of Carnwath, who held the office of treasurer, and whose manse, according to Dr. Murray, was situated "to the south of the cathedral churchyard" (Rottenrow: The Regality Club, 3rd series, pt. ii. p. 48).

[1] A hardhead, otherwise called a lion, was a small coin of mixed metal or copper, valued at 1½d., and not in good repute at the date of this protocol. Knox, as quoted in Jamieson's Scottish Dictionary, said of them:—"Daille thare war such numbers of lions (alias called hardheids) presented, that the baseness thairof maid all thingis exceeding dear." Base coins bearing the name seem also to have been imported. An act of the convention of royal burghs, dated 5 January, 1570-1, desires an inquiry to be made "becaus of the sclander and evill brute (rumour) rasit on the haill merchants of this realme, quha ar allegit to be the hamebringaris of the fals hardheidis, fals plakis, and uther fals cunze, quhilk is the principall occasioun of all derth" (Convention Rec. i. p. 22).

1 On 11 October, 1575, "James Rankene is fund in the wrang and amerchiament of court for the taking downe, at his awne hand, of ane greit croce liand in Rattounraw, pertenyng to the toun" (Glasg. Rec. i. p. 42). It is probable that this cross had, in pre-Reformation times, been erected in front of the lands adjoining Rankene's tenement, for the purpose of distinguishing them as the property of the Rood altar. All the lands belonging to the altar were conveyed by Queen Mary's charter to the magistrates and council in 1566-7, and transferred by the latter to the college in 1572-3; but the "greit croce" was evidently detached from the property, and seems to have been regarded as still "pertenying to the toun."

[1] In some local histories and gazetteers the village of Bishopbriggs in Cadder parish is said to have derived its name from certain rigs or ridges of land there which belonged to the bishops of Glasgow. The designation given in the text, however, indicates a different origin. It is probable that the name was applied to a bridge erected by one of the bishops for facilitating communication with his rentallers, and used in connection with the principal highway from Glasgow to the north and east.

[2] A chaplainry at the altar of Corpus Christi was founded in the year 1487 by Thomas Forsith, a canon of Glasgow, who endowed it with two tenements, on the east side of the High Street, and certain annualrents (Glasgow Cathedral, by Archbishop Eyre: Glasg. Arch. Transactions, vol. i. pt. iv. p. 485.; Reg. Episc., Glasg., pp. 452-4, No. 446). The property mentioned in the text probably formed part of the original endowment.

1876. JAMESONE—LEPERS. 26 August, 1572, 3 p.m. HENRY GIBSONE. Vol. ii. fol. 87.

James Andersone sold to Sir Mark Jamesone, vicar of Kilspynde, an annualrent of 10 s. Scots furth of a tenement, fore and back, belonging to Sir James Hill, lying t.c., on the south side of the street called Troyngate, between the lands of John Youngar on the west, and of John Snodgers on the east. Sasine given by Mr. Adam Wallace, bailie. Thereafter, Sir Mark, moved with piety and zeal of devotion, resigned the annualrent in favour of Sir Robert Conighame in name and on behalf of the poor lepers dwelling (pauperum leprosorum degentium) in the hospital, situated at the south end of the bridge of Glasgow, and their successors there in all time coming.[1] Witnesses: f. 88.

[1] References to lepers and to hospitals for their accommodation occur among the oldest burgh laws. Thus in Leges Burgorum, c. 58, it is provided that those afflicted with the disease who could sustain themselves should be put into the hospital of the burgh, and for those in poverty the burgesses were to gather money for their sustenance and clothing. The lepers were also allowed to "sit at the toun end" and ask alms. Another act (Statuta Gilde, c. 18) refers to the collection of alms "for the sustenance of lepers in a proper place outwith our burgh." At a later period (James I., 1427, c. 8) parliament ordained that lepers though permitted to enter burghs on certain occasions should not be allowed to ask alms except "at their awin hospitale, and at the porte of the toune, and uther placis outewith the borowis." From such notices it may be inferred that lepers' hospitals were not uncommon adjuncts of ancient burghs. In Glasgow the bishops had originally the chief control over the affairs of the community, and it was probably they who caused the hospital to be erected at the outskirts of their burgh. The site, part of the lands of "Guvan" (in the division latterly called Gorbals), had belonged to the See from early times, and one of the old endowments consisted of "tua bollis meill . . . out of the bishoprick, yeirlie" (Glasg. Rec. ii., p. 293).

Sir James Y. Simpson in his erudite treatise on "Leprosy and Leper Hospitals in Scotland and England" (Archæological Essays, pp. 1-184), gave a list of leper hospitals traced by him, though on account of the difficulty in procuring information, it was not regarded as anything like complete. As regards the Glasgow hospital Professor Simpson cited the authority of M'Ure for its having been founded in 1350 by the Lady of Lochow, daughter of Robert duke of Albany; but in appended notes Dr. Joseph Robertson shows that if the tradition had any foundation in fact there was inaccuracy in details (Ib. p. 162). Perhaps endowments came from the source indicated by the Glasgow historian.

In the appendix referred to Dr. Robertson quotes as the "earliest record notice" of the Glasgow hospital which he had observed, a charter granted in 1494, whereby William Steward, prebendary of Killearn and rector of Glassford, endowed a chaplain to serve in the chapel of St. Ninian which he had lately built for the hospital of the lepers near the bridge of Glasgow. On the anniversary of his death twenty-four poor scholars were to assemble in the chapel of the hospital to perform certain services for which one penny was to be paid to each, and one shilling likewise was to be paid to the lepers. The lepers were to ring the chapel bell for the Salve Regina every night, and to pray in the chapel for their benefactors (Ib. p. 163). The charter is printed in Registrum Episcopatus Glasguensis, pp. 488-90, No. 469.

It happens that there are preserved among the city's papers three documents of an earlier date than that described by Dr. Robertson. One of these is an instrument under the hand of George Lorn, notary, setting forth that on 30th June, 1485, there assembled at the hospital of the lepers near the bridge of Glasgow all the men and women lepers dwelling therein, and, in presence of the notary and witnesses, appointed John Elphynstoun, burgess and citizen of Glasgow, their procurator, with special authority to receive sasine of an annualrent of 20 s., payable furth of a tenement of George Hucheson, on the west side of the street leading from the cathedral to the market cross, between the tenement of Patrick Swan on the south and the tenement of the master of the grammar school on the north. The next document is an instrument by the same notary recording the giving of sasine on the following day, from which it is ascertained that the annualrent was gifted by Thomas Huchonson, burgess and citizen of Glasgow, son and heir of George Huchonson, with consent of his father, for the poor and leprous persons, male as well as female, dwelling in the hospital, in pure alms, they making earnest supplications

1878. AIKIN. 1 September, 1572, 8 a.m.

James Aikin, maltman (polentarius), citizen, resigned in favour of himself in their daily prayers, for the souls of George Huchonson, his wife, and their children, and for the souls of their parents and all the faithful dead. Sasine was given by John Burell, bailie, to John Elphynstone, as procurator for the lepers, in presence of Sir Alexander Clugstone, Thomas Bartholomew, John Hall, Patrick Swan, Robert Govane, John Quhyt, and Sir John Rankyne, chaplain. The third document is an instrument by George Lorn, notary, dated 16 August, 1491, narrating that Robert Adamsoun, burgess of the city, for the weal of his soul and for the weal of all the faithful dead, gave to the men and women lepers dwelling in the hospital an annualrent of 12 d. payable furth of his tenement lying in the Walkergait. An interesting reference is made in this instrument to the chapel of St. Ninian as then newly built, the hospital being described as "juxta pontem Glasguensem et capellam Sancti Niniani noviter edificatam." This was three years previous to Stewart's endowment in 1494, and confirms what is there stated regarding the date when the chapel which he had founded was built.

In addition to the endowment specified in the text, there were other grants by Sir Mark Jameson to the hospital, as vouched by original instruments and other documents still preserved. A "rentale of Sir Mark Jamesoun foundatione of certane annuelis to the pure lepir folkis beyond the brig of Glasgow" specifies 6 s. upliftable from "Niniane Syar tenement in Briggate"; 6 s. from a tenement and rig of land in the north vennel in Rutherglen; the 10 s. mentioned in the above protocol; 8 s. from a tenement on the south side of Briggait; 11 s. from a tenement in Troyngate; and 14 s. to the court clerk and the master of St. Nicholas Hospital "for uplifting of the saidis annuellis and utheris and distributing thairof to saidis seik folkis." (See Protocol 1318, vol. iv. p. 122.)

Numerous entries in the council records show that the leper hospital continued to be used till at least the the latter half of the 17th century. After the Reformation the kirk-session manifested their interest in it by visitations, and by looking after the collection of rents and the condition of the buildings. "Straw, stobbs and riggen turf" are, on one occasion required for repairs (Woddrow's Collection for Life of David Weems, Maitland Club, p. 40). But it was the town council who took the principal part in the management. A rental "of the haill particulars belonging to the Lepper Hospitall beyond the bridge" appears in the council record on 5 August, 1654 (Glasg. Rec. ii. p. 293). There are two bolls meal yearly from each of the abbacy of Paisley and the bishopric of Glasgow, with the like victual duty payable by "Lord Maxuell, out of the landis of the Mearnes." John Sheillis in Gorbals paid £6 13 s. 4 d. "for the feu dewtie of ane yaird thair quhilk perteanit to the hospitall"; and nine sums of 20 s. and under amounted to £5 15 s. Two years subsequently the council sold a house and yard in Gorbals "belonging to the Leper Hospital" for £12 of yearly feu-duty. M'Ure in his history, which was published in 1736, mentions that "no remembrance or vestige" of the hospital then remained. How and when the building fell into desuetude has not been definitely ascertained, but it appears that part of the original property continued in the city's possession till 1798. In that year about 551 square yards of ground fronting Adelphi Street, midway between Muirhead Street and Main Street, and "known by the name of the Lepers' yard," were exposed to public roup and acquired in lots by adjoining proprietors (MS. Council Record, vol. 38, p. 227).
